A party of students from the natural science department of Columbia University, New York, is taking a summer course in the form of an excursion into the western part of the United States. The trip will last about two months and be under the direction of Professor D. W. Johnson, of the university faculty.

The studies made will include different geologic formations in the different localities. The trip will reach to Devil's tower, Yellowstone and Glacier national parks, the Yosemite valley, the Royal Gorge of the Arkansas, Lassen Peak and the Lake Bonneville region.

This is the first extensive trip arranged for a student party of this kind and is expected to be a practical demonstration of the advantages to be derived from a study upon the actual sites here, they are found of different natural manifestations. Mineralogy, the formation and composition of the different kinds of soils and earths, as well as rocks, fossils, lava and other stony materials, will each receive attention in this broadened system of nature study.

TRAVELETTE

NAIROBI.

Europe and Asia and Africa have mingled their races in the building of a town which sits on the equator and yet is cool. Nairobi, the capital of British East Africa, is but a name to the outside world, but the victory of the name alone cingers up many possibilities.

Back from a sultry coast, up into the air for a mile, away over the rolling plains that stretch on to infinity Nairobi awaits. It was less than two decades ago that the Samalis, natives of the plains which have of late proven so attractive to hunters of the world, were alone in their occupancy of this town in the shadow of Mt. Kenya.

Then came the Britisher and decided that a railroad should pierce the heart of the continent. He looked about for a point in this equatorial region where he might establish headquarters for the operation of such a road. He found it here among the clouds, where temperatures are never oppressive and where a blanket is often needed in August or December. To build his road he conceived the idea of using other British subjects from India, that overcrowded land to the emigrants of which all nations close their doors. The Indians, anxious for elbow room, came gladly and here they have planted a strong colony. The Uganda railway was long ago finished but the Indians have remained and become the dominating influence of Nairobi—its mercantile and its industrial workers, its officials. From Hindustan they came, and among them are many Parsees, regarded by white men as the best of the race.

The houses are huddled together in the center of the town. Further out each sits in a plot by itself, surrounded by flowers. The square-built, verandah structure of the British official occupies a point of eminence and away in the offing is a country club where these dominions of the West engage in athletic sports and dress for dinner.

The Samalis, slender-bodied, sharp-featured, are still a people emerged in the customs that are heathen. They are the burden bearers for the white man and each garment they wear is evidence of an expedition which they have accompanied under European influence.

A strange blending it is of the races of three continents cast here on the skylight of that one which civilization has hitherto left in the dark.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

THE CATCH.

Old man Tightwadde stopped suddenly (for he had been walking). "By gum!" he said, "ain't the city wonderful!"

The sight that had met his eyes was the following sign outside a restaurant:

"Try our famous nineteen course dinners, including bread with or without butter, stuffed heron, pickled elk, brown gravy and three kinds of rhubarb."

Old man Tightwadde hesitated a moment and then strode in. "I seen your sign about tryin' your famous nineteen course dinners," he explained to the waiter.

"Yes, sir," said the waiter hospitably, "what kind of bread, sir, or omelette?" And he proceeded to serve the dinner and old man Tightwadde ate all the nineteen courses including the deviled snails and the scalloped wings, and the waiter couldn't find a single crumb to brush away.

"Well, I sutenly enjoyed that," sighed old man Tightwadde as he rose.

"Yes, sir, here's your check, sir," pay the cashier, sir," said the waiter. Old man Tightwadde looked at him bitterly.

"I knew there was a catch in it somewhere," he said.

MODISH COATS

Styles which show the newest ideas in cut, length and trimming. The belt is much in evidence in various forms, perhaps because the creators are imbued with the war spirit.

But there is nothing else war-like about the new coats. Some are simple and others ornate, but all have "style."

The collars are unique and generally quite large and the skirts quite wide and "swagger." Prices $10.00, $12.50 and $16.50.

NEW TAILORED SKIRTS, $5

We have just received a large shipment of Ladies' and Misses' Tailored Skirts, made of Serge and Poplin. The styles are the season's latest models.
